

Teardown, Day 4

Continued mild temperatures (40s), making the gully somewhat muddy. Indeed, we couldn't drive out the normal way with a loaded pickup, so we drove out through the former SODAR trailer access.

We're almost done. Today, removed almost everything from the field, including the concrete blocks that we returned to the company that rented them to us. Thanks to Ken for again allowing us to use the backhoe and his trailer for the concrete block removal. We did a walk-through and found mostly minor bits of trash. We left the Wisconsin temperature sticks in place in the field.

Tomorrow:

- We need to secure the base trailer for pickup by Trailer Transit at noon.
- Lou will call to arrange for pickup of the porta-pottys.
- We plan to pick up the Penske and load it (stuff is now just at the storage locker and at Ken's).

We will all travel home on Sunday. (Bob leaves tomorrow.) ISS is done, and Andy is flying back as I write this, though their trailer pickup isn't until Sunday.
