

Ops 3/3

Gary and I left Boulder around 8:30 this morning and arrived in Crested Butte around 2:00 this afternoon. The roads were all clear and the drive went well, save for a bit of snow as we approached CB. We hit the trail a little after 3:00 and made it to RMBL around 5:30. The path was pretty difficult for the two of us and it was snowing most of the way. Some sections had decent tracks, but many areas were filled in with either blowing snow or the new 1-2 inches that fell today.

In looking at the data this evening, things seem to be working well. I saw the odd T and RH readings at 1m.c and relatively lower values of Rsw.in at uw that Steve noted in an email to us. We will check both of these things out tomorrow morning and sweep off snow from the NR01, if needed.
